The South African Lt. Colonel Howie, who accompanied General Nadey on his trip to AFHQ from Hungary, suddenly reappeared in Rome and visited the General. Howie told the General that he had arrived some days ago from South Africa and was very much interested in the General's fate. In the course of a later conversation, Howie told the General that the Western Allies did not yet recognize the Debrecen Government and thus the armistice concluded with Hungary was not yet fully accepted. According to Howie, this is the main objection to the return of the General and his party to Hungary. Howie mentioned to the General that after the meeting of the "Big Three" the situation would be clarified. This statement was made by Howie in the presence of Baron Apor and his Secretary, Perczel.
